ATS Browser Cookie Policy

A browser cookie is a piece of data that websites ask your browser to store on your machine. Typically each time you view a page on a website it's like the website never saw you before; the website does not remember. The website needs a way to remind itself that you've visited before, and that's what it uses cookies for.

In the case of ATS cookies are used to temporarily remember index values to link from screen-to-screen. None are kept for you "next session".

What information is collected on Me via cookies?

In short; not a lot. The cookies we use are related to internal indexes to help ensure the correct information is displayed when moving from screen-to-screen. Remember that cookies are set by a website: they can only contain data that the website already has.

Advertising

We do not have advertising on any of our web sites.

Is my use of the site secure?

We use industry-standard encryption technologies when transferring and receiving your information. Additionally, we implement commercially reasonable security measures at our physical facilities to protect against loss or misuse of your information.

What are my options?

Because this site contains personally identifiable information users who do not agree to use of cookies at outlined in this document will not be permitted to login.

I don't like cookies. How do I turn them off?

Technology is here to help, but by blocking cookies you may be unable to log-in to our site(s).

To disable cookies please adjust the settings on your internet browser and choose from the available Cookies settings. For example, Chrome makes it pretty easy: Go to Settings, click Advanced, choose Content Settings, select Cookies, and add a site to your Blocked list.
